Chief Campbell told an Evening World reporter that there were reasons to believe the fire had been started by the igniling of escaping gas. There was a three-inch gas pipe and meter in the basement, where the fire sarted, and when the firemen arrived the pipe was uncapped and snooting a volume of gas a dozen feet away into a big volume of flame.

"My opinion is," said the Chief, "that there was a leak in the ineter, and that the escaping gas was lignted by several jets that were kept burning at night to furnish light for the watchmen."

The Kinney Brothers' Branch of the American Tobacco Companies' Cigarette Manufactories was totally destroyed by 1re this theory of the origin of the fire is disputed, on the ground that if the blaze had puted, on the ground that if the blaze had been caused by escaping gas there would have been an explosion.
